Calling the do not call list

Telemarketing is more prevalent now than ever, causing more than 137 million consumers to register with the national Do Not Call list. If you're among them, you may have noticed that your registration only affected certain types of callers.

That's because the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and the Federal Communications Commission (FCC), who administer the Do Not Call list, have limited jurisdiction. As a result, the following groups can still contact you:

- Political groups.
- Charitable organizations.
- Phone surveyors, when their sole purpose is to conduct a survey.
- Companies with whom you have a business relationship — this includes anyone from whom you've made purchases; they can call you for up to 18 months after your last purchase.
- Those who have received written permission from you.

For additional details or to register your phone numbers (including both home and cell phone numbers), visit www.donotcall.gov. Most telemarketing calls should stop within 31 days of your registration.

Know your internet needs

When choosing an internet plan, it's important to recognize your needs. A single person who uses the internet for emails, web browsing, and checking Facebook is not going to need the same internet plan as a family of four streaming video, playing online games, and using multiple devices.

Do you need more bandwidth?

When you connect more devices to the internet, you use more of your plan's bandwidth. An internet plan with a larger bandwidth, 100 Mbps for example, moves data faster than an internet connection with a lower bandwidth, like 20 Mbps, and allows you to use more devices at the same time. This means when you have more devices, you require a faster internet plan.

A household with one computer and two smartphones may be able to use a 20 Mbps plan without issue. Yet, most households have more devices than this. It's easy to accumulate devices when you count smartphones, tablets, smart speakers, security systems, smart TVs, and more.

If you have 10 or more devices connected to the internet in your home, a 50 Mbps plan or higher will give you the best experience. All your devices have to share that bandwidth. This means if you have a 50 Mbps plan and 10 active devices connected, those 10 devices are dividing 50 Mbps amongst them. If each device uses 5 Mbps, you have used all of your bandwidth, and you will likely experience buffering or a slow connection.

Do you need better WiFi?

Calculating how much bandwidth your devices use can be difficult. That's why PTCI offers Whole Home WiFi and expert advice. Whole Home WiFi helps manage your network and improves your internet experience without any of the hassles. It includes a Gigacenter dual-band router, which reduces the interference among your devices, and also provides access to PTCI's local support team.

To sign up for Whole Home WiFi, or to increase your bandwidth, please give us a call at 580-338-2556. You can also visit one of our stores to speak to a friendly customer service representative.
